"There is no trouble so great or grave that cannot be much diminished by a nice cup of tea." - bernard-paul heroux

let's talk tea

Tea originated in China, as legend has it, 5,000 years ago with Chinese Emperor, Shen Nung claiming the health benefits of tea in 2737 BC. However it was Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) that made tea famous in the 19th and 20th centuries. Scotsman James Taylor is attributed with planting the first tea estate in Sri Lanka. It was in 1867 that Taylor planted 20 acres of tea on the Loolecondera Estate, where he was the Superintendent. It was here that he perfected the technique of fine plucking - 'two leaves and a bud'.

Ceylon tea became the front-runner of the industry and was much loved for its unmatched quality and variety. The alchemy of land, sun and rain in the Paradise Island of Ceylon, as it was known then, presented the ideal climatic conditions for cultivation of tea. Ceylon added a new dimension to tea by producing variations in taste, quality, character and appearance, largely based on terroir manifested in the country. Ceylon tea with its distinct taste and character became every consumer's favourite cuppa.

A unique feature of Ceylon Tea is that its teas are grown at various elevations ranging from sea level to 6000 feet (1850 metres). This variance in regional elevation lends to teas being of the finest quality with an infinite variety.

Sri Lanka is the third largest producer of tea after India and China. However, Sri Lanka is the largest exporter of tea to the world, as much of India's and China's production is consumed by its own large populations.

CEYLON TEA GROWING AREAS

The oldest tea growing region. Kandy teas produce a relatively bright infusion with a coppery tone. Though lighter in the cup, they present a good deal of strength and body, though not as much as the lower-grown teas of Sabaragamuwa and Ruhuna.

DIMBULA

HIGH GROWN Dimbula teas are the classic high grown Ceylon's that, in the quality season between March and May, exhibit very clean bright & brisk teas, with a good coppery red colour. Notes of jasmine mixed with cypress can be detected.

RUHUNA 🖲

LOW GROWN The rich soil of Ruhuna, combined with the low elevation of the estates, causes the tea-bush to grow rapidly, producing a long, beautiful leaf that turns intensely black on withering and is particularly suited to 'rolling'. Ruhuna factories produce a wide variety of leaf styles and sizes, from prized 'tips' through whole- and semi-whole-leaf teas to 'fannings'

NUWARA ELIYA

HIGH GROWN High altitude and year-round low temperatures produce a very slow-growing bush with unusually small leaves that take on an orange hue – just a hint against the blackness – after withering. The infused leaf acquires a greenish-yellow tone, and the infusion is the palest among all the regional varieties of Ceylon Tea, with a delicate yet fragrant bouquet.

UVA

HIGH & MEDIUM GROWN

Uva teas offers a mellow, smooth taste. Uva experiences a quality season in July August which is influenced by the wind called the 'Cachan', a drying cool wind coming in from the North East off the ocean.

UDA PUSSELLAWA

HIGH GROWN Sometimes compared in character with that of Nuwara Eliya, though it appears somewhat darker in the cup, with a pinkish hue and a hint of greater strength.

Sabaragamuwa produces a fast-growing bush with a long leaf, very black when withered and well suited for 'rolling'. The liquor, too, is similar to that of Ruhuna teas, dark yellow-brown with a reddish tint in the dry season, though lightening somewhat with altitude. The 'nose' or aroma, however, is noticeably different from the Ruhuna product, with a hint of sweet caramel, and not quite as strong.
